

The Paradoxum of Reflexive Ignorance

[On a paradox presented to me:]

“One who sees all error — including his own — cannot trust even the sight that sees it.”

M. X. Theodore —

Sī quis omnia videt, tamen nunc scit — etiam sī negētur.

Sī quis nunc scit, ex mōtū fit fortitūdō — nōn impaviditās.

Sī alius nunc scit, sed condidit ab animo — prōditor ūiversī est.

Optāvī — nec paenitet... tūne optāvistī?

Interpretatione:

If one sees all, nevertheless they now know — even if denied.

If one now knows, movement is bravery — not an absence of fear.

If another now knows, but buries (it) from the soul — they forsake the whole.

I have chosen — and do not regret... Have you chosen?
